in Comanes and numerous other predatory tribes, in um occupied the country. It was settled by the Genose in 1193, who were expelled by the Crim-Tartars under a grandson of Ghengis Khan, in 1474. These relatory hords settled in the country, and were tributary to the Porte until the latter part of the last century, when Catherine II. took possession of and anexed the country to Russia.

The circumstances under which this country was mnexed to Russia forcibly illustrate the aggressive solicy of the Muscovite. Catherine II. inherited from Peter the Great a strong desire for territorial equisition on the Black Sea, and like that monarch dulged in dreams of extending her empire to the Bosphorus. She coveted the Crimea, and deliberately provoked a war with the Turk, who, defeated and humiliated, was forced to conclude the treaty of Kamardji in 1774. The terms of this treaty were subsequently strengthened, and forced the Porte to the treaty of Kainardji, the Baron de Thugut, the apresentative of Austria said: "This treaty is a model of ability on the part of Russia diplomatists and a rare example of simplicity on the part of the Turkish negotiators. By the terms of this treaty Bussia will remain the mistress, and will be at liberwhenever she shall think the opportunity fitting, to make descents upon the shores of the Black Sea. From her new frontier of Kertsch she will be enabled, at forty-eight hours notice, to conduct an army to the very walls of Constantinople." Simple as were the Tarks, in the estimation of Baron de Thugut, remonstrance, but with actual approval. It is stated that her representatives the Baron de Bruck, assisted in drawing up the treaty. This is not the only time arrival that Austria has allowed herself to be made the tool
